

Ibn Battuta and the excitement of the unfamiliar

The coconut and the paan

Some of the best examples of Ibn Battuta's strategies of representation are evident in the ways in which he described the coconut and the paan, two kinds of plant produce that were completely unfamiliar to his people.